MILITARY MATTERS.

AN INTERESTING CHAPTER ON SALUTES AND CEREMONIES.

The Amendments to Upton's Tactics Upon These Subjects—Gossip From All the Armories—Local Companies Drilling Industriously.

The amendments to Upton's Tactics this week cover the very interesting subjects of salutes, honors to be paid by troops, ceremonies, etc.

Salutes. Honors To Be Paid by Troops, Etc.—No salutes at inspections of quarters. Soldiers do not salute at the inspection of quarters, prescribed in Infantry Tactics, page 360. (Cavalry Tactics, top of page 436.) Nor do they salute on the occasions contemplated in the new Infantry (1,121 Cavalry) Tactics. In both cases they simply remain standing at attention. (Letters A. G. O. March 13, 1882.)

Salutes by Enlisted Men.—The regulations require an enlisted man to salute, under all circumstances, when meeting an officer, except when indoor and unarmed; in such cases he uncovers and stands at attention, as provided Paragraph 605 of the Regulations. (Letter November 10, 1888, 4,770 A. G. O., 1888.)

Salutes in Situations Where They Cannot be Returned—Question: "Should an enlisted man, passing an officer who is standing at parade rest in front of his company at retreat, salute it being manifestly improper for the officer to return the salute under the circumstances?"

Answer: Yes. Decision of the commanding officer of United States Infantry and Cavalry School, September 22, 1888.

Order for a Marching Salute.—In regard to the order of march for rendering a marching salute, Gen. Upton says: "This is not prescribed, but if done, the general could give any order to his troops, as first, cavalry; second, artillery; third, infantry. But for a regular review, the troops should pass first, infantry, second, cavalry; third, cavalry." (See paragraph 388, Infantry Tactics.)

Commands of sub-divisions render salutes only when specially directed—see—In case of a battalion marching past a general officer, I take it that pieces should be brought to a carry and the colonel only salute. How about a larger command? Commanding officer should salute. Should the bugle be sounded? Answer—No rules are prescribed except for review, but paragraph 702 should apply equally to commanding officer salutes. (General Upton.)

Ceremonies—When a company is inspected on company parade (not preceded by a review) the company does not present arms. The inspector is saluted by the company commander only, the company being at a carry. The officer, if he desires to inspect, salutes, acknowledges the salute and then salutes his company for inspection." If he desires to inspect, he may do so in addition to the inspection.

The inspection is conducted on the principle described—pages 358, 359, 360—Infantry Tactics.

If master follows the inspection, the command attention to master is given as soon as the inspection is finished.

Post of Captain at inspection when giving command, "Open boxes." At inspection the post of the captain, in giving the command, i.e., open, 2, boxes, is three yards in front of the right file of the company and facing to the left. Division of the commanding officer United States Infantry and Cavalry School, September 22, 1882.

Her most blessed work was this giving to others the hope of the Christian, and there are better men in the world today because of her brave, heroic life. Her soul and spirit, which was permeated by her love as by the sun's light, and her simple work had often the force of inspiration. She lived and yet she was more heroic, more modest, more spontaneous and spontaneous than in the instance of noble sentiments. Her beautiful enthusiasm sparked and stimulated the spiritual fibers of millions of souls. It was part of her faith that her highest happiness is found in that force of love and holy principle by which the soul is drawn to God. She was a true example of the heroism which lie led to self-renunciation, and in death, gave her the sublime resignation of the martyr—though the life closing behind her was a life of quiet, uneventful existence. We believed that religion was in harmony with intellectual improvement, with the pleasure of imagination, and especially, with human love and sympathy. Her life was a pure, free spirit looking into the face of God, and her soul's eyes gazing upon the face of Christ.
